Wouldst thou have me love thee dearest, With a woman's proudest heart, Which should ever hold thee nearest, Shrin'd within its inmost part? Listen then! Thy country's calling On her sons to meet the foe! Leave those groves of rose and myrtle, Drop the beamy harp of love, Like young Korner, scorn the turtle When the eagle screams above ! Haste, where Freedom's sons are falling On the field of Mexico!

Dost thou pause? Let dotards dally! Do thou for thy country fight, 'Neath her starry emblem rally, God! my Country, and her right! Listen then! her trumpet's calling On her sons to meet her foe! Woman's heart is soft and tender, But 'tis proud and faithful too-Shall she be her land's defender? Lover, soldier, up and do! Haste away, where men are falling, On the fields of Mexico!

Now our lov'd and trophied banner Floats where Cortes' eagles flew-Shall the hordes of Santa Anna Stain its field of starry blue ? Listen then, thy country's calling On her sons to meet her foe! Wreathes of fame, and smiles of beauty, Will repay the warrior's deeds; Shall a quibble sully duty When an outrag'd country pleads ! Haste, then haste! where men are fal-On the fields of Mexico!

Seize thy father's ancient falchion, Which once flashed as battle's star-When young Hope, the timid halcyon, Fled our old ancestral war. Listen now! thy country's calling On her sons to meet her foe! Sweet is love in moonlight bowers, Sweet the altar's sacred flame, Sweet is Spring-time with her flowers, Sweeter far the patriot's name! Haste! thy brethren now are falling, On the fields of Mexico!

Should the God who rules above thee Doom thee to a soldier's grave, Hearts will b ik, but Fame will love thee, Canonize among her brave; Listen then, thy country's calling On her sons to meet her foe! Rather would I view thee lying On the last red field of life, 'Mid the slain and mangled-dying-Than to be a dastard's wife!

Haste! where brave men now are fall On the fields of Mexico! [ling [ling, But my heart is now a prophet,
And beholds alarthy brow,
With young Glary's star above it,
Safe return'd, heloge me bow;
Listen then! thy country's calling
On he sons to meet her foe!

Leave these groves of rose and myrtle,
Drop the beamy harp of love,
Like young Korner, scorn the turtle
When the cagle screams above! Haste, then, love! where men are fal-Outhe fields of Mexico! [ling.

A FRAGMENT.

I saw saw her in the bloom of youthful beauty. The blush of modesty was on her | lia is not the noctua gossyppii-is not the cheek, and sensibility sparkled in her azure same which destroyed the crop of 1846. eye. I will not attempt to delineate the beauties of her person, much less to porsay, she was all that was good and lovely in woman. Again I saw her. She stood beside the altar, pale and lovely: her dew lit eye was raised to heaven, and her slight frame trembled with emotion, as she took upon herself the holy vow of wedlock .-Years passed on, and again I beheld her, she was bending over the coffined clay of a lovely infant. A mother's anguish was swelling her heart and heaving her bosom with convulsive sobs, as she passed her lips, for fifty years, at least, the only great defort he last time, to the marble cheek of her child. With a trembling hand she wiped | that the same will continue to be the case away the gathering tears from her eyes and | at irregular intervals, so long as the plant said, "Thy will, O God! be done; what is shall continue to grow." one of thy creatures that she should dare complain?" A more than mortal calmness came over her. She stood in the dignity of a superior being gazing on the dead form of her beautiful child. Again I saw her. Site stood beside the bier of him who had manhood's pride to lay down by his lifeless child, and she his beloved one, was left to weep his premature death. It is true when she felt his last breath on her cheek, when she met his last look of love, she thought life a burthen! But heaven was her support-on that she leaned, and that soon taught her to be resigned to this last and greatest affliction. Calmly the bereaved, that lovely mourner, took her last farewell of him she had loved with the constancy of woman, and with a serene brow took the fatherless to her bosom. Once more I saw her. Still fair was that lovely brow, over which dark hair parted in luxuriant brightness. But ah! how strangely cold, how awfully still! She too, was dead! She too, had died in youth's bright hour; With a tearless eye had clapsed her orphans to her heart and commended them to heaven. Then, even then, her faith failed her not, even at that trying moment when death was busy at her heart, her faith failed her not. She was a christian.

THE PINDAR OR GROUND PEA.-A WIL ter in the Tallahassee Floridian urges the extensive cultivation of this truly valuable plant upon Southern farmers, and broaches Remaining in the Post Office at Abbeville C. a new project in the production of a valuable oil from the nuts. He speaks of it as

To a few only it appears to be known that the product of this plant, the Pea, gives out an oil in some respects unequalled as an accompaniment to the table-in its natural state this oil has no rival. Clear and mild with a peculiar taste extremely gratifying to the palate-rich and buttery it is of that consistency so much admired in the preparation of salads, anchovies, &c., for table use. Among plants the Pindar ranks deservedly as one of the surest crops, not withholding a generous yield even on poor ground, and amply acknowledging the superiority of rich land if light and friable. The Pea is easily gathered, and with less labor than any of the seeds or beans, is ready for the Press. When hulled, which is most readily effected, and ground, the oil flows most freely, and uncommonly clean from the press, but when submitted to the known modes of clarifying oil, it becomes limpid and pure, and when immediately bottled and sealed, appears to remain in that state of freshness and retaining the fine odor so highly agreeable to the amatuers of vegetable oils in the preparation of food. The refuse after expression is admirable for hogs, and the vine for stock, if not returned to the soil in gathering the pea-if saved and Gibert, J A Dr cured, which is affected with much ease, it Grice Samuel mixes in the cutting box well with the rye, barley, oats and rice. The product of the fodder is estimated at more than a ton to the acre; and of peas, when cultivated alone and well fifty to seventy-five bushels. The plant is cultivated much north of us but from fair trial, it is found that like other producing plants, it delights in the rays of a warm southern sun and soil, and that the product is richer with a finer draoma than the oil from the same plant produced in Virginia and the Carolinas. I have no hesitation in stating that if this oil was fairly introduced into the northern states, it would take a high rank at the table of the bonvivants. This oil is more readily and with less labor and expense, procured from the pea than it is from any other seed, bean or pea we know of It is hulled and ground by simple machinery and the press required for the extraction of the oil is neither very powerful nor expensive. The production of this oil for commerce challenges an early attention of planters, and small as large capitalists. Any quantity could be produced and prepared for market, a great part of the labor being of that kind that would suit all; the child, old age, and the cripple-all might be employed in the production of this new material. I feel confident that after a little use it would become a successful rival of the best table oil of Europe.

THE COTTON WORM.—Great anxiety and alarm having been felt among the planters of Concordia and a neighbouring regions in regard to the appearance of the cotton worm, induced Professor Forshey to make a hasty excursion to several plantations, for the purpose of inspecting the destroyer, and verifying his identity with the noctua gossyppii. The result of this investigation is published in the Concordia Intelligencer, and he confidently expresses the opinion, "that the worm now feeding upon the Cotton leaf in the vicinity of Vida-

He described several points of difference, and adds: "the present-worm is not only tray the graces of her mind. Suffice it to the same worm, but, to my eye, is not much

> He also says: "I have been reminded by those who think different, that this may prove just as destructive as the noctua gossyppii to the cotton plant. I have to reply that I can give no assurance to the contrary. But if my opinion be sought, it is decidedly in the negative. True, it is possible, a new enemy to the plant may be introduced, but

In noticing the subject, the Editor of the Intelligencer remarks:

"The article by Professor Forshey, in this number, will draw attention. We deem it due to those who have not the same opportunity to examine the subject, to say been her soother, her counsellor—the bier that we differ from him. The worm now of her husband. He had been called in his found in our fields eats the cotton, and we care not by what name it is called."
